Dr Caelli Jo Brooker is a multidisciplinary academic with over twenty years' experience as a creative professional working across the creative industries and tertiary education sectors. As an educator and researcher, she brings multidisciplinary relationships and experience to the conception, curation, direction, and presentation of engaging and valuable experiences for diverse audiences. A deep respect for creative cultures characterises her research approach, which engages in multiple forms of creative practice, education, and collaboration as they relate to materiality, visuality, identity and culture. An advocate for visual, participatory, sustainable, and collaborative approaches, as well as Aboriginal ways of knowing, being and doing, she works in research and teaching at The Wollotuka Institute for Indigenous Education and Research at The University of Newcastle, Australia.
